Roles and responsibilities

How far are you with your goals as discussed in the “one on one” with the CLO President? (continued)

- ▶ How far are you with these goals as outlined and discussed during the “one on one” meeting with the President.

Except for the work involved with the lay logo, I am proud to say that we are right on target with the goals the president and I spoke about during our meeting. Follow-ups were done with the corresponding secretary, the director of public relations, President Makiti, the treasurer, and of course, the district historiographers to ensure information was in place timely and accessible for our audience.

- ▶ How does accomplishing your goals align with the CLO President’s vision.

The “Call to Action”, ensuring that teaching, training and empowering becomes the core and center of our business... is of utmost concern in my efforts to bring together the “good news” of lay persons who have toiled and are active in the vineyard.

STAKEHOLDERS

► Who are they?

The Office of the CLO Historiographer stakeholders are the laity of the church, the historiographers in each district down to the local lay members, and the CLO officials who help run this prestigious organization.

► How will they benefit from your efforts?

The significance of the CLO is so monumental that it is of the utmost importance that information (vetted facts) are provided using available automated sources, broadcasts, and placed on Social Media platforms so that laity (including YAR's – our young people) – this is critical; are equipped and have access to the then and now of this great organization.
